

creation of circuses in summer and building skating rinks in the winter.

After finishing high school Mary went to Normal School (teacher's college) and then on to teach grades one and two in primary school until she retired. Mary loved to travel, seeing many parts of the world during her summer vacations. Mary was never married.

Wilfred and Ronald both signed up with the Canadian Army in Guelph during World War I, Ronald in the Artillery and Wilfred in the Signal Corps.

Ron was with a unit that was on the famous Vimy Ridge campaign but was not involved at the time due to an injury he suffered prior to the battle. He was in hospital in England at the time.

When Wilfred got back to Canada from England he received an invitation from his Uncle Sam in Boston to come down and work with him. After a short time Wilfred filled an opening in the maintenance department of Harvard University. He stayed at Harvard, rising to Manager of Maintenance for the whole university by retirement. Wilfred married Evelyn Bradley in 1924 and they had two sons, Donald and Bruce.

When Ronald came back from England he rejoined the bank he left to join the army but the only opening was in London, Ontario. There he met Wilhelmina Darch at church functions. An opening occurred at the Ontario Agricultural College (OAC) in Guelph and Ronald came back to Guelph where he spent the rest of his life. He met Wilhelmina again at the OAC where she was taking courses in Home Economics and married her shortly after. They had no children. The OAC was elevated to full university status by the time Ron retired. He was Bursar of Guelph University when he retired.

Robert also went to Boston where he became a lithographer in a printing company. He married Margory Redy. They had no children.

After finishing school Frederick travelled to Toronto where he was employed by the Robert Simpson Co. in the yard goods department. When an opportunity came up to travel to Vancouver, British Columbia, selling yard goods along the way, Fred headed west.

He got as far as Brooks, Alberta where he met a boyhood friend who had taken up farming on land granted by the government. Fred decided this looked good for him too. He sent the samples on to Vancouver and proceeded to get a land grant, setting himself up as a farmer.

Vernie Belle Owen's family had come from Bellingham, Washington and had a farm nearby. Vernie and Fred were married in 1915, setting up housekeeping on Fred's farm on the prairie.

Vernie and Fred had three children, Marion, Fletcher and Wilfred. Wilfred died at age 20 months of medical complications. Fred farmed until several years of crop failures wiped them out. They traded the farm for a large rooming house in downtown Toronto and moved there in May, 1924. Fred had several vocations during the next few years. He was active in local politics until he received the appointment as Bailiff of the First Division Court of Ontario in Toronto. He continued in this job until he retired in 1958. Fred died in 1974, Vernie in 1989.

Their son, Fletcher, wanted to join the Royal Canadian Air Force early in WWII but was persuaded to first finish his apprenticeship in the printing trade. He signed up as soon as his apprenticeship was completed, taking his pilot training in Western Ontario. He became a pilot of a Lancaster bomber in the RAF after he got to England, participating in many trips to bomb targets in Europe. On 29 July 1944 he and his crew were on a mission to bomb Dusseldorf, Germany, when they were shot down over France; crashing with a full bomb load. There were only a few artifacts left to identify the plane and crew. Just before he left for England, he married Rita Dyardin. They had no children.

Marion married Richard Taylor in 1938. They had three children, Richard, Mavis and Fletcher. Marion continues to enjoy her retirement in her house in Toronto, knitting infants clothes for her senior's club and visiting her four grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

There are no Fowkes left in Guelph. Mary looked after her mother and father until they died, continuing to live in the Dublin Street house until death in 1983. Ronald was the last Fowke living in Guelph. He died in 1988.

A transcribed interview with Vernie Fowke is available in Acrobat PDF format if anyone is interested. It covers Vernie's early life and Vernie and Fred's life after they were married. A similar interview with Ronald Fowke is being prepared and will be available in the near future.

IS YOUR SURNAME CONNECTED TO THE FOWKE'S ?

In recent months quite a large number of correspondents have been making e-mail enquiries because their family name has been connected in some way to the Fowke surname. Often such enquiries can lead to information hitherto unrecorded and both parties gain information important to their research.

In my book, 'Fowke Family Tree', I have a large index of spouses' surnames and decided that it might be appropriate to list them here for all to see. If your surname appears here, make contact with me please, as we may both be able to provide each other with some important or, at least, interesting data.

The list is quite extensive so it will be broken down into alphabetical sections and published over the next few issues of this Newsletter. Read left to right on each line.

Traditional Family Recipes

Family gathers...loved ones gathered around a table, chatting and laughing as familiar dishes are passed back and forth. It seems our memories are often filled with these images and the smell and taste of the food plays an integral part in our traditions. Passing family recipes along is another way of passing along our history. We are interested in compiling a collection of Fooks/Fowke family recipes. Send us your favorite family recipes (ingredients, instructions, cooking or baking directions), who the recipe originated with along with the history behind it. If you can, include information on the person you most remember being associated with this recipe and even a picture of that person or a family gathering where it was served. Recipes received will be included in future issues of the family newsletter.
